Introduction

Single-parent families are families where a parent lives with dependent children. They live either alone or in a larger household, without a spouse or partner. In a single parent family, all the family responsibilities fall on one parent when his/her mate leaves the family. These responsibilities include caring for the children, managing the family's finances and handling the expenses, doing all the household chores while working at an office and paying attention to the emotional needs and happiness of oneself and the whole family.
