Introduction

Strikes and lockouts are used as tools by employees to improve their economic positions and attain their goals.

A strike occurs when there is a cessation of work, a refusal to continue work, a slow-down or other concerted activity initiated by employees for the purpose of slowing down the employer's output. Picketing is an activity that can take place during a strike.

A lockout takes place when the employer either shuts the place of employment, suspends work, or refuses to continue to employ a number of employees in an attempt to persuade those employees to agree to terms of the organization.
