Vocabulary

Collectivism: a theory or political system based on the principle that all of the farms, factories, and other places of work in a country should be owned by or for all the people in that country.

Doctrine: a belief or set of beliefs, especially political or religious ones, that are taught and accepted by a particular group.

(the) Proletariat: the class of people who do unskilled jobs in industry and own little or no property.

(the) Bourgeoisie: (in Marxism) the part of society, including employers and people who run large companies, that has most of the money and takes advantage of ordinary workers.

Egalitarian: believing that all people are equally important and should have the same rights and opportunities in life.
