Quantifiers 'Each' and 'Every'
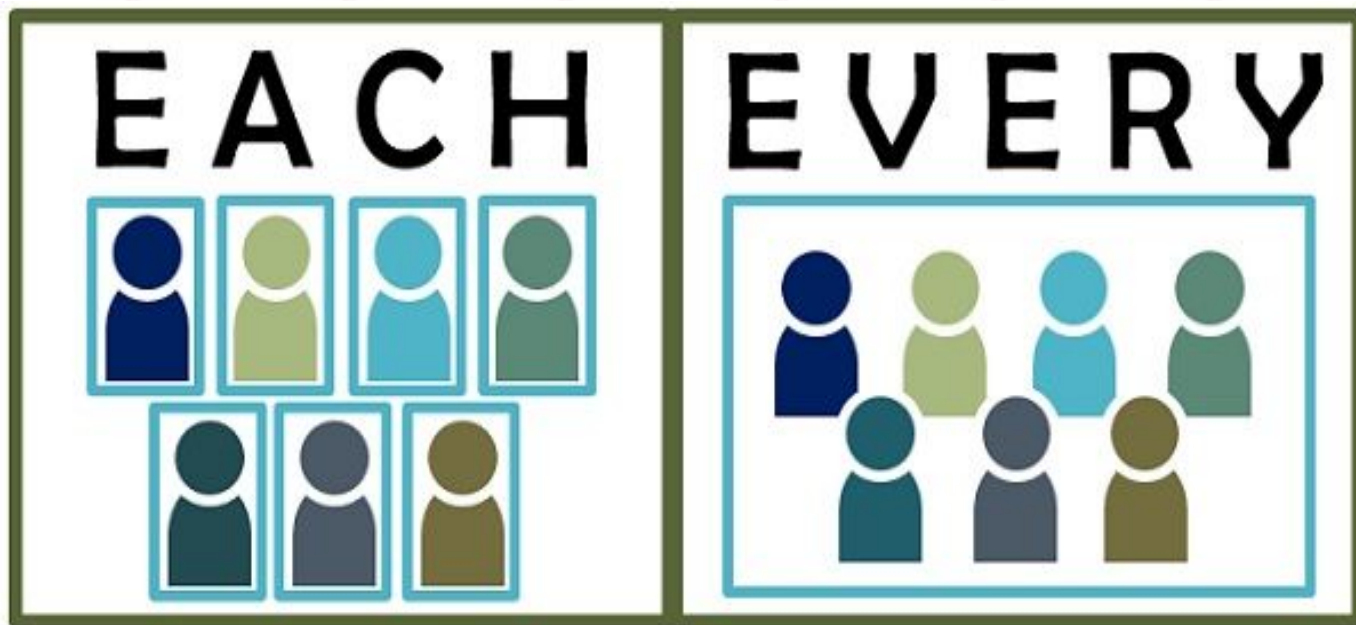

Introduction

When do we use each and when every?

The words each and every have similar meanings.

Each/Every time I go to work, the red car is parked in front of the office.

However, each and every are not always interchangeable. There are situations where you can either use each or every.

Uses of 'Each'

❑ 'Each' with singular and plural:

Each refers to a plural number of people or items, but it considers each person or item as an individual or dissimilar unit, it does not consider the group collectively. Each can also be used as a pronoun.

We use each to refer to the individual things or persons in a group of two or more:

There were four rooms, each with wonderful views of the garden.
